Arab music derives from a vast geographical area ranging from the Atlas Mountains and parts of the Sahara in Africa to the Arabian Gulf region and the banks of the Euphrates. Unified by the Arabic language and influences of Islam, Arab music is also the product of centuries of contact and exchange with musical traditions of other cultures from West Africa to Persia.

New York City has long been a major center for Arab musical activity dating back to the 1920s when Syrian, Lebanese and Palestinian musicians, reflecting the predominantly Levantine population, performed their own regional styles. The more recent concentration and interaction of Arab people from different countries now living in New York has put demands on Arab musicians to perform a vast and elaborate repertoire of music from Morocco to the Gulf States and from Syria to Yemen.

The Near Eastern Music Ensemble was formed in New York in 1982 by the pre-eminent Palestinian musician and composer Simon Shaheen. Created to increase awareness of Arab music through concerts, recordings, workshops, and lectures, the ensemble has brought its message to the public through presentations at major U.S. universities, including Columbia, MIT, Harvard, Princeton, and Yale, and at such prestigious performing arts centers such The Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and Carnegie Hall. The group’s recording debut, Turath (Heritage) was honored by the Library of Congress as an outstanding release of 1992.

Notes on the Musical Compositions

Dhikrayati
This piece was composed by Mohammad Al Qassabji, one of the leading musicians in the 20th century in Egypt. He was innovative, especially in his vocal compositions arranged for the Egyptian Diva Um Kulthum. He composed few instrumentals including Dhikrayati, which means, My Memories, and is a three-part piece that includes a semi-improvised section in the middle part.

Traditional Egyptian Medley
This piece starts with a short Taqasim (instrumental improvisation) on the qanoun, followed by a Sama‘i, which is a four part dance composition and a recurring refrain in a moderate 10/8 rhythmic cycle and ending with Raqsit Badi’ah, a dance composition from the early 1930’s that include two parts, each followed by a refrain allowing improvisation on various instruments.

Istihlal
This piece features an instrumental Sufi introduction, which establishes the mode and meditative mood, creating a stately image allowing a haunting metric improvisation on the nay.

Instrumental Medley
Starts with an instrumental version of Muwashshah “Lamma Bada,” a post classical genre (9th c.) of Arabic poetry arranged in stanzas, followed by a Taqasim on the oud Ends with Longa Farahfaza, a lively dance form that consists of four couplets (khanat) which follows a rondo-like format with a recurring refrain (taslim).

Folkloric Medley
Selections of two instrumental pieces based on folklore shared by Syrian, Lebanese and Palestinian rural musical heritage. The first song is titled “Ya Hnayyina,” a folkloric tune that was re-arranged by the Rahbani brothers and sung by Fairuz of Lebanon. The second piece is “Dal’ouna,” a folk melody that is the core of the popular village step-dance.
